Abstract

The weevil tribe Listroderini (Curculionidae: Cyclominae) was originally recognized for a group of New World taxa. During the last decades its concept was expanded, and additional new taxa were described from the Americas, Australia, New Zealand, and the Tristan da Cunha-Gough islands. This checklist evaluates the nomenclatural status of all the generic and specific names applied to listroderines. A total of 407 species classified into 36 genera are recognized. The following synonymies are established: Gromilus insularis robustus Brookes, 1951 and G. insularis antipodarum Kuschel, 1964 = G. insularis Blanchard, 1853; Gromilus veneris setarius Broun, 1909 = G. veneris (Kirsch, 1877); and Listronotus oregonensis tessellatus Casey, 1895 = L. oregonensis (LeConte, 1876). Two secondary homonyms were detected and replacement names are proposed: Gromilus brounii for G. setosus (Broun, 1917 non Broun, 1893), and Gromilus kuschelii for G. striatus (Broun, 1921 non Broun, 1915).

Key words: Cyclominae, weevils, Americas, Australia, New Zealand

Introduction

LeConte (1876) recognized the Listroderi, for the New World genera Listroderes, Listronotus, and Macrops. During the XXth century additional new taxa were described for southern South America (e.g., Germain, 1895–1896; Hustache, 1926) and North and Central America (e.g., Henderson, 1940; O'Brien, 1977). Additionally, the circumscription of the tribe was expanded, and several taxa originally assigned to other tribes (and even subfamilies) from Australia (e.g., Pascoe, 1870; Lea, 1928), New Zealand (e.g., Broun, 1893a, b, 1909, 1913), and the Tristan da Cunha-Gough islands (Brinck, 1948) were considered to belong to it (Kuschel, 1964, 1971; Zimmerman, 1994; Morrone, 1997). The last checklist of the weevil genera of the world (Alonso-Zarazaga and Lyal, 1999), however, excluded from Listroderini some of the latter genera. Oberprieler (2010), while analyzing the circumscription of the subfamily Cyclominae and its tribes, reassigned these genera to the Listroderini, added Anorthorhinus and Methypora from Australia and Rhigopsidius from South America, and excluded Telurus (transferred to the Entiminae: Cylydrorhinini).

My objective is to provide weevil systematists with a framework for future studies by summarizing published information on the taxonomy and nomenclature to date.

Methods

Taxa are arranged hierarchically in alphabetical order at the level of genera and species, with valid names highlighted in bold font. Two species names that could not be placed either as a valid name or as a synonym of another name are included at the end of the checklist, under the heading Species inquirendae. Within each synonymy, names are arranged chronologically, with multiple synonyms proposed in a single publication listed alphabetically by name.

Information on type specimens was obtained from the original descriptions and checked with secondary literature (Kuschel, 1955; Camousseight, 1980; Elgueta & Morrone, 1993; Morrone & Loíacono, 1994; O'Brien, 1997; Morrone et al., 2002; Lanteri et al., 2003). The following codens are used to identify types in the text: H= holotype; L= lectotypes; N: neotype; P= paratypes; PL: paralectotypes; and S= syntypes. The acronyms identifying the collections where they are deposited are as follows:

Results

The tribe Listroderini is comprised of 407 species, classified into 36 genera (Table 1). Oberprieler (2010), based primarily on the structure of the female ovipositor, recently added the Australian Anorthorhinus and Methypora, and the South American Rhigopsidius to the genera traditionally assigned to Listroderini. Among other genera, Gromilus, Liparogetus, Nestrius, and Steriphus were first transferred to Rhythirrhinini: Rhythirrhinina (Alonso-Zarazaga and Lyal, 1999) but later placed as Listroderini (Oberprieler, 2010). Lastly, the South American Telurus was transferred to Entiminae: Cylydrorhinini (Oberprieler, 2010).
